RED BOXES TO STAY

There Will Be No Change in the Fire Alarm System.

Topeka's Gamewell fire alarm system is to be retained. A few weeks ago Jay E. House, mayor, said that if he found by an investigation that the little red boxes and the network of wires and poles maintained over the city for the purpose of sending alarms to the fire department were not worth what they cost, he would recommend their abolishment. He found that all alarms covering a period of twelve months had been de-livered either by telephone or orally except eleven. The Gamewell system was used just eleven times in the year was used just eleven times in the year and at no time between the hours of 11 p. m. and 5 a. m. It was installed before telephones were popular. A suggestion was made that telephones, be installed where the boxes are located and that they be connected with the telephone system, thereby doing away with the Gamewell pole-line, but no such change will be made.

"The insurance companies insist no such change will be made.

"The insurance companies insist upon two separate fire alarm systems" said Mayor House. "I made an investigation and also talked with Chief Hanlon, of the fire department. I know the Gamewell system is of little gractical use, but it will be retained."

"If the city tries to do away with the Gamewell system, it will have the fire insurance companies to fight," said Chief Hanlon. Chief Hanlon does not admit the uselessness of the system in notifying the department of fire. He maintains that it is really useful.
